(d) The student repeats the experiment using the same equipment and the same starting height.  She finds out that the time taken for the car to move down the slope is not exactly the same for each experiment.  Suggest three reasons why the student gets different results when she repeats the experiment.  (3)	)
starting height.  She finds out that the time taken for the car to move down the slope is not exactly the same for each experiment.  Suggest three reasons why the student gets different results when she repeats the experiment.  (3)
She finds out that the time taken for the car to move down the slope is not exactly the same for each experiment.  Suggest three reasons why the student gets different results when she repeats the experiment.
She finds out that the time taken for the car to move down the slope is not exactly the same for each experiment.  Suggest three reasons why the student gets different results when she repeats the experiment.
She finds out that the time taken for the car to move down the slope is not exactly the same for each experiment.  Suggest three reasons why the student gets different results when she repeats the experiment.
She finds out that the time taken for the car to move down the slope is not exactly the same for each experiment.  Suggest three reasons why the student gets different results when she repeats the experiment.
She finds out that the time taken for the car to move down the slope is not exactly the same for each experiment.  Suggest three reasons why the student gets different results when she repeats the experiment.	) starting height.  She finds out that the time taken for the car to move down the slope is not
· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·	